Architects Plan New University Library

The problem of suitably housing several priceless historical collections in a general library serving 10,000 students at the main branch of the University of Texas is now before architects for the university. Herbert M. Greene-La Roche & Dahl, Dallas. Regents of the university have not set a date on which plans will be adopted and bids ordered. The architects have been at work on the proposed new library for some time, however, and expect to have most of the details worked out by the time the governing board is ready for this addition to the main campus.

Beside the Wrenn collection of English books and manuscripts, the University of Texas owns one of the finest collections of Hispanic-American material in existence and a collection of Texas history documents that rapidly appreciate in value.
